

A Knight Basketball Player

A Knight basketball player can come in any size, shape, or color. There is no common denominator except a love for the game and a desire to get the most out of their abilities. They are not only proud of their strengths, but understand their weaknesses. They are first of all concerned with the good of their team and know that individual recognition will come through team excellence.

A Knight basketball player has the enthusiasm of an evangelist, the discipline of a monk, the heart of a warrior, and never loses the honesty and character of a small child.

They appreciate the support of hundreds of fans, but they are much more aware of the example they are setting for the young player watching from the sideline. They are happy when they score a basket, but they never forget that a teammate threw them the ball. While they never let up at either end of the floor, the other team is not the real opponent; it is the full extent of their own potential that they are always playing against. They let referees, with occasional assistance from their coach, do the officiating.

A Knight basketball player is made not born. They are constantly striving to reach their potential knowing that they will bypass other players who cannot withstand the strain of this quest for excellence. They realize that the challenges and competition of today's game will better prepare them for tomorrow's world. They know that the true measure of the performance is not recorded in wins or losses, but in how much of themselves they have given to the game.

A Knight basketball player never realizes when the odds are stacked against them. They can only be defeated by a clock that happens to run out of time. They are what a younger player wants to become and what an older player can remember with great pride that they once were.
